Department of Korean Language & Literature

Academics

The Korean Language and Literature Department fosters national identity through the study of our language and literature, contributing to creative endeavors in the field of Korean language and literature. It nurtures autonomous and creative cultural talents through learning and research in Korean linguistics, classical literature, and modern literature. By engaging in various academic society activities, it cultivates independent capabilities and the ability to proactively respond to real-world challenges. The curriculum is designed in stages, considering the characteristics and level of the major, combining traditional Korean language and literature with knowledge relevant to the globalization era, fostering knowledge and theories about the Korean language and culture. Through academic field trips and practical learning experiences, students engage in hands-on knowledge acquisition, share research findings through academic conferences, and cultivate a sense of solidarity among peers and between juniors and seniors.

Department of Korean Language & Literature

Educational Goals of Departments

- Cultivate creativity along with efficient and systematic knowledge in the fields of classical literature, modern literature, and Korean linguistics.
- Develop an understanding of the values of traditional culture and cultural diversity through in-depth exploration of our language and literature.
- Foster and apply high-level humanistic knowledge through the study of our language and literature, cultivating practical problem-solving skills.

Students Envisioned by Departments

An independent individual with both ethnic identity and cultural creativity.
