

Department of Chinese Language, Literature and Culture

Dept. of Chinese Language, Literature and Culture

Academics

The Department of Chinese Language and Culture was established in 1981 as the Department of Chinese Language and Literature. The graduate program was introduced in 1992. In 2017, it was reorganized as the Department of Chinese Language and Culture. The department recognizes language, characters, and diverse contents of literature that encompass ancient and modern China as "cultural content." It aims to cultivate professionals who creatively reproduce specialized knowledge in Chinese language and literature.

This department has expanded its strides for both domestic and international student exchange activities and advanced education. Since its establishment, the department has placed a strong emphasis on international cooperation and exchange with China. In 1983, it signed an exchange agreement with Tamkang University in Taiwan, laying the foundation for international exchanges. Subsequently, after the establishment of diplomatic relations between South Korea and China, in 1994, agreements for exchange and cooperation were signed with Beijing Normal University and Wenhua College in China.

Currently, cooperation and exchange programs with China, including Taiwan, have been centralized under the support functions of the International Exchange Team. The department consistently expands collaboration with more than 30 universities in China, including institutions such as Qinghua University (Beijing), Shanghai Normal University, Shanghai International Studies University, Huadong Normal University, and Sun Yat-sen University (Guangzhou). Additionally, there are collaborations with around 10 Taiwanese universities, including Peking University, Chinese Culture University, and Tamkang University.
